

We have been experiencing record high markets for California vegetable these past few weeks. Extreme weather along with insect damage has created havoc on the last half of the Salinas deal. Lettuces are the most dramatically affected, with sunburn on outer leaves. It is more important than ever to exercise proper prep habits and care. Keep in mind the raw product in packaged salads is also weaker so be sure to order load to load and keep those displays turning. We do not expect relief until the desert districts get underway in early November. We've added a couple of photos that really tell the story.
